ALISON A POSSIBILITY.

It may be the Candidate if Blaine and Harrison Kill Each Other.

A few Senators are wandering around the northern end of the Capitol this afternoon and all of them are talking politics to a greater or less extent. Here and there is tendered an opinion to the effect that Harrison and Blaine will succeed in killing each other before the convention, in which event the most likely man is Senator Allison. This nomination would be very popular with a large proportion of the Senators and Repre-

it is remembered that Boies has carried Iowa for the democracy twice in succession there has been no reason to doubt the theory which makes Senator Allison a candidate without any real chance of success. Those who advocate Allison think Secretary Tracy would be a good man to carry the other end of the ticket. This, they claim, would make Iowa and New York certainly republican.

The injection of Allison into the situation has not so materially diminished the demand which seems to exist for a third candidate as that of those who have been quite loyal to the Secretary of Agriculture are just now making a nomination for the presidency. Not a derogatory word is being said, but there are a few keen politicians who are weighing Rusk against Allison, Spooner and Senator Mendenhall in their list of chances and are working to make up their minds which would be the best man for the party.
